

From the Editor

Great skills, bright futures

Friends,
Did you know that every child has a special talent? Some are great at drawing, others love singing, some can fix things, and many enjoy helping with chores. These skills are more than just fun; they can grow into ways of earning income and building confidence.

When children take pride in their abilities, they discover that their talents have value. For example, a child who enjoys baking can sell cookies at school events. Someone who loves art can design greeting cards. In the magazine this week, 13-year old Joseph Mbinda is using his skills in automotive mechanics to earn money. Even simple skills like gardening or storytelling can bring joy to others and create opportunities.

Learning to use skills responsibly teaches important lessons: hard work, creativity, and independence. It also shows that money is not just given but earned through effort and dedication.

Most importantly, you realise that talent makes you unique. When you practice and share your talent, you help your family, support the community, and dream bigger about the future.

So, be proud of what you can do because your skills are treasures and treasures can shine.

Uncle Jeff